THE PLUMMER FAMILY.

THE following genealogy of the descendants of Francis Plummer of Newbury — mainly of those who remained in New England — is now printed to enable the surviving descendants of Moses Plummer, son of Samuel, and grandson of Sylvanus, to more clearly and satisfactorily trace the particular branch whence they came.

FRANCIS PLUMMER,¹ b. 1594, d. 1673, came from Woolwich or Wales, England, about 1633. He took the free-man's oath in Boston, May 14, 1634, and settled in Newbury, 1635, of which town he was one of the original grantees, and was the ancestor of all the Plummers in this country. He descended from the ancient family in England, which from the period of the Barons' wars has always maintained a respectable standing among the gentry of that country.

The Plummers of Georgia, the two Carolinas, and Maryland, are of the same stock. George and Arnold Plummer, late members of Congress from Pennsylvania, and Franklin Plummer from Mississippi, were descendants of Francis Plummer, as are also those of the name in New Hampshire, Maine, and other New England states.

The land upon which Francis Plummer settled in Newbury is now held in the eighth generation by direct descent from the original proprietor.

MOSES PLUMMER ⁵ (Samuel,⁴ Sylvanus,³ Samuel,² Francis,¹) b. Aug. 6, 1740; m. Sept. 9, 1765, by Parson Smith, ESTHER HERSEY of Boston; came to Portland, Me., (then Falmouth,) and purchased, Oct., 1765, the property corner King (now India) and Fore streets. It was burnt by the British Oct. 18, 1776, and rebuilt 1784. He was a shoe and leather dealer, noted as a trader in hard money. He hired a substitute during the Revolutionary war. The government paid him $600 for the property burnt by the British. He saved his hard money and movables by two teams, carrying them to Stroudwater, where he also took his family. He died Oct. 17, 1824. She died July 29, 1815, aged 70.

The distress of the people of Falmouth may be learned from the following extract from Willis' History of Portland.

"Letters were sent to Congress by E. Moody and S. Deane, who were committed with the petition and the following report was made. Whereas, by the late unparalleled inhumanity of the British forces in burning the greatest part of Falmouth, many of the inhabitants of the town are reduced to great distress and want, etc., Resolved, they be allowed £250. The amount was really small, being in paper exceedingly depreciated. In an appeal from the town to all friends of humanity in Europe, in 1783, it is said not less than 1000 persons, including our wives and children were instantly reduced to a state of unspeakable distress."

MEMORANDA.

BOSTON, June 10, 1876.

Inscription taken from an old gravestone situated at the "Old North Cemetery," so called, in Dorchester, Mass.

In memory of Capt. Edmund Morton
Who departed this life

JANUARY 9th 1786,
In the 73^d year of his age.

In his life he was a kind and Loving husband, a tender and Provident Parent A friendly and benevolent neighbor.
Pitiful And liberal to the poor,
Needy and distressed,
His life useful, his Death Lamented.

Capt Edmund Morton was the great-grandfather of Mrs. Jane Plummer Thurston, he being the grandfather of her mother, Mrs. Abigail Plummer. And when the British soldiers, called "The Red Coats," came up the heights of Dorchester, her mother saw them from her window, and ran down into the arch, in the cellar, with her infant child, and remained until they ransacked the house and left it, when she ran with her infant to her father's. The neighbors ran from the next neighboring house, but one man sick in bed, whom they killed.

Her mother has often said, that at the time of her grandfather's death, he owned half of Plymouth, Mass., which Perez Morton, his nephew and executor or administrator, cheated her grandmother out of, by obtaining her signature to papers, before her children (daughters) were cognizant of the fact. She lived to be over ninety years, and had her carriage and servants till after her husband's death.

One of her daughters married Capt. John Smith, captain in the Revolutionary war. Her name was Mary Ann Morton. Her sister married Mr. Redding; she died at an advanced age at her daughter's, Mrs. Edwards, in Cambridgeport. Mrs. Edwards left several children. Another daughter married Mr. Dowse.
